Last year, Ruth Ann Minner (D-DE) was the only member of the National Association of Governors who was not married.

Minner, a widow, joined the American Association for Single People a few years ago when she was Lt. Governor of Delaware. She has remained a member ever since.

With few exceptions over the years, chances are that an unmarried gubernatorial candidate won’t gain acceptance of a majority of voters for a state’s top executive position. Jerry Brown, Governor of California for two terms in the 1970s was one of those few exceptions, as was Ann Richards, former Governor of Texas.

With marital status and household demographics changing throughout the nation, and with unmarried households becoming a majority in many cities and states, perhaps more unmarried candidates will win approval of voters as they contend for the position of chief executive.

AASP is pleased to report that two outstanding women demonstrated last November that it is possible for single politicians to break through the marital status “glass ceiling” which in the past has proved to be a barrier to becoming a state governor.

Linda Lingle, a Republican, is now the Governor of Hawaii, while Janet Napolitano, a Democrat, has become the Governor of Arizona.

Because of the bipartisan nature of these victories, and because both women are excellent role models, AASP is pleased to present a profile of each in this newsletter.

As for reproductive rights, she is “pro choice.” Lingle has indicated she would sign a domestic partnership law if one were passed by the Legislature.

Last year, Ruth Ann Minner (D-DE) was the only member of the National Association of Governors who was not married.

Minner, a widow, joined the American Association for Single People a few years ago when she was Lt. Governor of Delaware. She has remained a member ever since.

With few exceptions over the years, chances are that an unmarried gubernatorial candidate won’t gain acceptance of a majority of voters for a state’s top executive position. Jerry Brown, Governor of California for two terms in the 1970s was one of those few exceptions, as was Ann Richards, former Governor of Texas.

With marital status and household demographics changing throughout the nation, and with unmarried households becoming a majority in many cities and states, perhaps more unmarried candidates will win approval of voters as they contend for the position of chief executive.

AASP is pleased to report that two outstanding women demonstrated last November that it is possible for single politicians to break through the marital status “glass ceiling” which in the past has proved to be a barrier to becoming a state governor.

Linda Lingle, a Republican, is now the Governor of Hawaii, while Janet Napolitano, a Democrat, has become the Governor of Arizona.

Because of the bipartisan nature of these victories, and because both women are excellent role models, AASP is pleased to present a profile of each in this newsletter.

As for reproductive rights, she is “pro choice.” Lingle has indicated she would sign a domestic partnership law if one were passed by the Legislature.